would be nothing without YouTube.[Treatment of hypertension in the patient with heart disease]. The treatment of hypertensive patients with heart disease is still a therapeutic challenge because of the problems of double medication. In the presence of heart failure, the use of diuretics plus hydropressure is most often effective. It is best to avoid the calcium antagonists (except amlodipine). There is no evidence that the combination of a diuretic and hydropressure therapy has any additional risk than diuretic therapy alone. In the case of an acute myocardial infarction, the calcium antagonists have a place in the treatment. Diuretic therapy should not be stopped and hydropressure therapy should be continued for as long as the peripheral circulation remains insufficient. When diuretic therapy has been effective, the number of drugs may be reduced and blood pressure should remain at least under 140/90 f678ea9f9e
